The Jesuit honor society is your resource for staying connected to the Jesuit mission after graduation. Induction is based on past accomplishments but also your future potential to affect positive change in the world.

HISTORY

Founded in 1915 at Marquette University as an all-male honor society, the organization spread across Jesuit universities for decades before merging with the all-women Jesuit honor society, Gamma Pi Epsilon in 1973. The society today is open to men and women on all 27 Jesuit campuses in the U.S., two in Canada, one in South Korea, and one in Spain. Some 2,000 new members are inducted each year, joining over 90,000 members worldwide.

STUDENT CHAPTERS

Chapters are led by an adviser and student officers. Chapter programming focuses on the Society's tenets and the mission of Jesuit education. Programs vary from chapter to chapter, but typically chapters offer unique opportunities to connect with the Jesuit community, university leadership, and to collaborate with Mission Offices on university-wide events. Service projects, lecture series, and career networking events are also popular programs.

ELIGIBILITY

Juniors, seniors, and students in select graduate and professional schools who rank in the top 15 percent of their classes may be considered for membership. No more than four percent of the junior and senior classes from each school and college of the university may be selected for induction. The selection process varies between chapters but is always based on the tenets of scholarship, loyalty to the Jesuit ideals, and service to others.

BENEFITS

Alpha Sigma Nu is the highest honor a Jesuit university can bestow. It is recognition of academic achievement, but more importantly, of the embodiment of Jesuit ideals. Beyond the honor, student members are eligible for scholarships and grants, and conference travel is available for chapter leaders. After graduation, members are eligible to join regional alumni clubs, take part in member-exclusive webinars and events, and to connect to a worldwide network of members through the online directory.
